... from Jessica Platt

If we are to love God, then it is imperative that we love one another.

Let me tell you a story... not too long ago on an LRT not too far away, there was a rather disheveled, middle-aged woman sitting across from me. Now this woman was one of those people who sprays their bags over every available seat and turns the music on their phone full blast. As I was sitting there, listening to her not so great taste in music, a thought crossed my mind, 'maybe I should politely ask her to turn her music down?'

My request was responded to with a lot of four letter words and demands that I go to a not so nice place after I die. While she continued to rage profanities at me for the following five minutes, I genuinely considered snatching her phone and tossing it out the nearest open window. However, what stopped me from crushing her cellular device under the wheels of the train was this thought, 'she is made in the image of God - this awful woman who is screaming in my face is actually created in the likeness of God.'

Genesis 1:27 tells us that humans are made in His image, meaning the closest thing we will see to God in our lifetime is not a beautiful sunset, or an incredible mountain range, or even an adorable kitten, but another human being. Yes, there are some miserable people out there, but God calls us to love them! Why? Because He created humankind to be a reflection of Him.

A thought...
